

Kingston's Dolls

By Mel Morgenhesser

Adam's Fall

Kingston House made a wise choice when it decided upon its female partner for Frolics. We choose Doll House, and the friendship that was begun last March still continues today.

Our Frolics skit was called

"Pair of Guys Lost", and we still convey our apologies to John Milton. The skit told the story of Adam and Eve, two students who were thrown out of "Paradise" (Queens College) because they cheated on their exams, and the trials and tribulations they go through as they attempt to re-enter Queens. Probably the height of the skit was the creation of a fog on stage, this was rumored to be the best special effect ever used in Frolics, or Follies. Although we didn't receive any official recognition (an award that is) we did win each others friendship and companionship.

A little while after Frolics, Doll House found that it was being thrown out of its house (after we had a fingerpainting party where the walls were used for paper) we decided that in the interest of friendship, companionship, but mainly just for fun that Doll House would share Kingston's house for the four summer months. This arrangement turned out to be a great one for both groups during the usually partyless months of the summer, Kingston and Doll House had many great times, going out on an overnight together as well and several other unbelievable events. In the fall the tables were turned, Doll House got a new apartment and Kingston was thrown out of its abode. For a month (until Kingston moved into its new palace) Kingston moved in with Doll House. Although we are both in our separate houses now, the feelings for each other that began with Frolics can never be separated.

Awards

Patterson

one was very pleased with the selection of those acts which were

"Jug Band Music"

good enough to win an award.

Thinking back to it now, the "Academy Awards" night proved to be one of the top social and theatrical events of the past semester. All four participating groups are eagerly looking forward to the next "Academy Awards" night, which is tentatively scheduled for the Easter recess.
